Final Term Report

This semester has been a season of growth for Find Your Voice. Despite the setbacks COVID-19 caused, Find Your Voice has been able to do more than we probably would have with in-person activities. Of course, we look forward to the day we can all begin to introduce Find Your Voice in person, however, with this being the age of social media, we made the best out of the situation.

Over the course of this semester, Find Your Voice has successfully launched a new website, online art gallery, reached 300+ followers on Instagram, led Watch Parties for the Education Living-Learning Community, and many more. We are also officially approved to become a student organization, pending our training in February. Find Your Voice also received a mini grant from the Honors College, allowing us to expand our social media outreach. Our team has made Winter Plans to decrease the workload over Winter Break, only meeting two times over break. We are at a place where we are growing, but we are steady in our plan and executing it. Our research and interviews have benefited us greatly as we begin to expand ourselves and incorporate the ECU community more.

This semester, I have been in charge of the online art gallery, outreach, and communications. I contacted dozens of artists, many galleries, and other student clubs and organizations on campus. I had the opportunity to lead both Watch Parties with the ELLC and conduct 7 of the 8 interviews. Through my conversations with artists and ELLC students, I heard many stories from survivors, family members of survivors, and advocates. With these stories, our team has remained strong in our mission and purpose to uplift all survivors' voices. I have also recently been more involved in the Social Media portion of our team, assisting Allie with things she needs. I have also been gathering the names, section details, and emails of all COAD professors to reach out and continue our Watch Parties. Also, I contacted Phi Mu and they were happy to create a sisterhood event with the theme of sexual assault awareness.

Our future is full of Watch Parties with more COAD classes, collaboration with Greek Life, continued social media outreach, themed submission for Many Voices, and starting our student organization.
